SOME NOTES ON

"MADE IN HEAVEN"

Each year Milton Stiefel leaves one week open toward the end of the season. This is purposely done so that the Playhouse audience will have something a little special and unexpected.

Now it is time to announce this year's surprise! It will be none other than Richard Arlen in "Made In Heaven." Mr. Arlen is well known in this section of Connecticut. He maintained a residence in Essex and has spent many summers in this part of the state and has a host of friends here.

The vehicle that Mr. Arlen has chosen is sure to delight the patrons of the Playhouse. "Made In Heaven" is a comedy of marriage in a sophisticated New York setting.

The play opens on a typical New York cocktail party in full swing. The guest of honor is a celebrated Frenchman being entertained by a smart young married couple. Mr. Arlen plays the husband, and host. The cocktail party ends, as many do, with things not quite right. The husband feels that he is not receiving the attentions he deserves from his wife. In fact he is just plain jealous. He walks out on his own party and goes to a hotel with every intention of having a gay evening with any casual acquaintance.

He meets an attractive questionable young woman whom he invites to his room. But alas, he cannot bring himself to indulge his romance. The wife meanwhile tracks him down and is horrified to find the young woman in his room and of course preparations for a divorce issue.
